Building Hope Together

The support of alumni and friends is essential to ensuring A Greater Hope for the students of today and tomorrow.

On the Cover

Students pass amongst campus landmarks as they go about preparing for the future. The college exists because of the generosity of those who for more than 150 years have valued the difference that the college makes and wished to help ensure and enhance a Hope education for generations to come. This issue's focus on A Greater Hope outlines the many ways that the campaign will have an enduring impact and how alumni play a crucial role in making it happen.

“Quote, unquote”

Qquote, unquote is an eclectic sampling of things said at and about Hope College.

Hope College formally launched its 151st academic year on Sunday, Aug. 26, welcoming the incoming Class of 2016. In the Opening Convocation address, Charlotte vanOyen-Witvliet, who is the John H. and Jeanne M. Jacobson Professor of Psychology, presented “Learning in a Life that Matters.”

Approximately 2,000, primarily new students and their families, attended the event, which was held in the Richard and Helen DeVos Fieldhouse in the midst of the college's Orientation Weekend, which ran Friday, Aug. 24, through Monday, Aug. 27.

The entire address is available online.
hope.edu/nfhc

“What I invite you to think about is your vocation of learning at Hope,” Dr. vanOyen-Witvliet said, “Not learning to live a life that will matter someday (as if real life begins after graduation), but learning in a life that already matters now.” Hope's mission, she said, is established “to support the ongoing discovery of how to live out your vocation as an individual, in community. Learning is the calling of students. Learning is the vocation of our college community.”

The students, Dr. vanOyen-Witvliet noted, are joining a community whose dedication to fostering their discernment extends campus-wide.

“Hope is made up of people who get up every day to create the best possible community of learning,” she said. “Together, administrators, librarians, cooks, secretaries, trustees, coaches, directors, chaplains, custodians, professors, officers, counselors and many more play their parts in making Hope a learning community that is concerned with your flourishing here and now... and ultimately when all things are made new.”

What that means for the students across their years at Hope and how they might themselves focus their experience, she noted, is reflected in an overview from the college titled “Graduates anchored in Hope”: “Hope graduates are educated to think about life's most important issues with clarity, wisdom and a deep understanding of foundational commitments of the historic Christian faith. They are prepared to communicate effectively, bridging boundaries that divide human communities. They are agents of hope who live faithfully into their vocations. Hope graduates make a difference in the world.”

A key step in the process, Dr. vanOyen-Witvliet said, is for the students to think in terms of calling: to discern where needs, faithfulness, talents, and interests intersect.

“Frederick Buechner (in Wishful Thinking: A Theological ABC) says that ‘The kind of work God usually calls you to is the kind of work (a) that you need most to do and (b) that the world most needs to have done... The place God calls you to is the place where your deep gladness and the world's deep hunger meet,’” Dr. vanOyen-Witvliet said.

She described six “signposts” that provide clues in discerning calling, a listing shared in the book The Will of God as a Way of Life by Dr. Gerald Sittser '72, who is a professor of theology at Whitworth University: What motivates you? What are your talents or gifts? What life experiences form you? Opportunity, with its open doors and closed doors. Conversations with a discerning community. And joyful service—Buechner's “deep gladness.”

Hope, she noted, would provide numerous opportunities for students to explore how the pieces might fit for them, and even, perhaps, to be surprised by the result.

“Beware, attending classes, conferences, and the Critical Issues Symposium could inspire a new love for history, political science, philosophy, poetry, statistics, piano performance, chemistry, another language, theology or psychology,” Dr. vanOyen-Witvliet said. “You could realize that you have gifts in areas you hadn't explored before. You might learn about communities you didn't know existed. And, you might see the world's needs. You just might discover a calling you hadn't planned on. It happens.”

Distinctive Hope

Colleges and universities don’t exist in isolation. Hope benefits in numerous ways from its hometown of Holland, Mich., not least of all because the campus is adjacent to the award-winning downtown, and in turn serves as a resource in partnership with the community. Indeed, the college owes its existence to Holland’s founder, who established the Pioneer School from which the college grew because he knew that education was essential to the city’s future. The annual Hope-Holland Community Day, in its 47th year this past September 1, celebrates the relationship, an opportunity for the campus and Holland communities to come together for a picnic and a home football game (some 4,250 strong at newly renovated Holland Municipal Stadium). As Holland Mayor Kurt Dykstra said in remarks from the 50-yard line to the capacity home audience, there may be communities and colleges with relationships that are as strong, but there certainly aren’t any with relationships that are better.

ENROLLMENT RECORD:

The summer's projections proved accurate: the largest incoming class in the college's history has helped lift Hope to record enrollment for a second year in a row.

Hope has enrolled 3,343 students, a total buoyed by the 904 first-time students who enrolled this fall.

The previous highs, both set last year, were 3,249 and 848 respectively. It is the seventh year in a row that overall enrollment at Hope has been above 3,200.

Hope anticipated the high enrollment based on the strong 2011-12 admissions-recruiting year and large number of registrations during the summer, and as reported in the August issue of News from Hope College added course sections and housing across the summer months to help assure that the college was ready.

FORMER PM HONORED:

Hope presented an honorary degree to Dr. Jan Peter Balkenende, former prime minister of the Netherlands, on Friday, Sept. 7.

He received the degree, a Doctor of Laws (LL.D.) during a banquet in the evening in recognition of his distinguished service to the Kingdom of the Netherlands and for his emphasis on Christian principles as a component of good government. He is pictured at right with President James Bultman '63.

Dr. Balkenende also presented a campus address, "Europe: Risk or Opportunity? Economic developments, financial challenges and European values," earlier in the day.

Dr. Balkenende was prime minister and minister of general affairs of the Kingdom of the Netherlands from July 2002 until October 2010. He is now a professor of governance, institutions and internationalization at the Erasmus School of Economics and the Erasmus School of Law of the Erasmus University Rotterdam. He is also a partner at Ernst & Young (BeNe Head Office, Rotterdam), responsible for international affairs, corporate responsibility and advisory activities on public-private issues.

NEW PROFESSORSHIP:

Dr. Aaron Best of the biology faculty has been appointed the first recipient of the college's new "Harrison C. and Mary L. Visscher Endowed Professorship in Genetics."

The professorship was established by Dr. Harrison C. Visscher '51 and his first wife, the late Mary Zweizig '52 Visscher. It honors a distinguished member of the biology faculty who leads an active teaching and research program in the field of genetics and/or molecular biology and demonstrates in his or her professional and personal life a commitment to the mission of the college. Appointments are for a 10-year term.

Dr. Best has been a member of the Hope faculty since 2004. He teaches microbiology, and his primary research interest is in understanding the evolution of fundamental cellular systems and how microorganisms function at a systems level.

His appointment to the professorship began on July 1. He was honored during a formal investiture ceremony on Thursday, Sept. 27.

MORTAR BOARD HONORED:

The college's chapter of Mortar Board has continued its tradition of recognized excellence, again receiving multiple awards during the national organization's annual summer conference.

The honors follow having received multiple awards during each of the past several years, including being named the top chapter during the national conference in 2010. There's a five-year wait before the chapter will be eligible to be considered for the top award again.

The awards program recognized activities during the 2011-12 school year. Hope received a "Golden Torch Award" and 17 "Project Excellence" awards. The conference was held on Friday-Sunday, July 20-22, in Chicago, Ill.

The "Golden Torch Award" honors chapters that have excelled in the areas of scholarship, leadership and service. The Hope chapter was one of the top five "Golden Torch Award" recipients for the fifth year in a row.

The Hope Alcor chapter received 17 "Project Excellence Awards," after receiving 12 awards last year and eight awards during each of the two years before that.

GUIDE PRAISE: Hope has continued to fare well in a variety of college guides as the newest editions have been hitting the shelves.

Hope is among the select number of colleges and universities nationwide listed in the new edition of the book Colleges That Change Lives: 40 Schools That Will Change the Way You Think About College. The college has been included since the publication debuted in 1996.

Hope continues to be listed among the best liberal arts colleges in the nation in the annual rankings compiled by U.S. News & World Report, in the first tier, at 100th out of the more than 250 institutions that are considered national liberal arts colleges, and is one of only six identified by the publication as a "2013 Up-and-Comer." Hope also continues to be included among the 33 institutions that the publication recognizes for providing outstanding undergraduate research/creative project opportunities, and is one of the 75 national liberal arts colleges in a listing of "A-Plus Schools for B Students."

Among other annual guides, Hope continues to be one of only about 300 colleges and universities included in the Fiske Guide to College, and is included in The Insider's Guide to the Colleges, compiled and edited by the staff of the Yale Daily News; in the America's Top Colleges guide published by Forbes Magazine; and ranked as one of the "Best in the Midwest" section of the 2013 Best Colleges: Region by Region posted on PrincetonReview.com.

HOPE IN PICTURES: Please visit the college online to enjoy extensive photo galleries organized by topic and chronicling a variety of events in the life of Hope. Pictured is a moment from this year's "Time to Serve" program, which involves hundreds of new students in service projects throughout the greater Holland area shortly after they've started at Hope, helping them to get to know their new community and ways that they can serve within it. (Although designed for new students, the program is also popular with upperclassmen, with many signing on simply because they enjoy the experience and want to help.)

Innovative, Student-Focused, Recognized Excellence

By Chris Lewis '09

Ever since Hope's founding in 1866, teacher preparation has been one of the college's primary focuses. In fact, Hope's first catalog stressed the importance of preparing educators for long-term careers, by emphasizing what was then known as the "Normal Branch" of college education, stating, "One of the ends proposed by the Institution has been the training of teachers; and those who have fixed on teaching, as a permanent profession, will be allowed to take the normal course of elective studies."

Today, the college's department of education recommends roughly 150 graduating seniors to the State of Michigan for teacher certification each year, and more than 3,100 alumni work in elementary and secondary education, teaching in public and private K-12 schools throughout the world, all graduates of a program that itself earns high marks from the state. Earlier this year, the department earned a 70 – the highest score possible – on the Michigan Department of Education Teacher Preparation Institution Performance Scores Report, which was released this summer. Hope and the University of Michigan were the only programs in the state to earn a perfect score. Since the report's inception in 2005, Hope has received an "Exemplary" rating every year, tying for first in 2006-07.

Prior to the establishment of the state's report, Hope's department of education was also recognized by the International Society for Technology in Education (ISTE) in 2002 as one of only six colleges nationwide to earn a "Distinguished Achievement Award." The award was developed to identify institutions that integrate ISTE standards into their teacher-education programs.

"These standards represent the most innovative thinking by educators regarding what teachers need to know about and be able to do with technology for teaching, learning, and assessment," said Susan Mooy '64 Cherup, who is the Arnold and Esther Sonneveldt Professor of Education. "Technology has become an integral part of teaching and learning for both students and professors and consistently reflects changes in the technological landscape. For example, iPad apps are currently used in the department's literacy classes to enrich reading and writing skills. In addition, the apps are used in courses like 'The Exceptional Child' to prepare students for future careers in special and general education."

She added, "Initially, faculty debated whether to provide a separate technology course or to include technology in all courses. The department decided that students would gain a working knowledge of technological applications if they were infused into all education courses rather than taught in one course."

The college's department of education has itself earned top marks from the State of Michigan, tied for first from among all of the state's teacher-education programs in a report released earlier this year. Above, students participate in the college's Liverpool June

"Through this approach, we are prepared to accommodate different learners by taking into consideration visual, auditory, and kinesthetic styles," said Lindsey Lane, a senior from Palatine, Ill., with a special-education double-major (learning disabled and emotionally impaired). Aside from its technological applications, the department is also well-regarded for its field placements, which begin with the program's very first course, "Educational Psychology," and continue throughout students' collegiate careers, enabling students to work with children and fully understand the demands of teaching well before their final semester as student teachers begin.

Field experiences are built into nearly every education course, as students receive 120-150 hours of direct experience, teaching a wide range of subjects in multiple grade levels. Allison Taber '09, who now teaches first grade in Hudsonville, Mich., was able to experience the department's full assortment of field placements first-hand.

"I had placements in many schools and grades, including kindergarten, first, second, and sixth grade," Taber said. "My placements progressed from observation to teaching small lessons, to receiving full responsibilities, including parent contact. They were an excellent opportunity to experience teaching in a classroom."

The opportunities also extend off-campus, including summer programs at South Dakota's

Term, one way that the program helps provide experience with a variety of educational needs and teaching models, the better to help graduates serve wherever in the world their careers take them. (Photo courtesy of the department of education)

Rosebud Indian Reservation and in Liverpool, England.

Allison Greene, a junior from Bloomfield Hills, Mich., with a comprehensive education K-8 and special education-learning disabled major, participated in the Rosebud and Liverpool programs this summer.

"I learned a lot about patience and understanding of students with different backgrounds," said Greene. "I was also able to teach my first lesson, so now I feel more confident in getting up in front of a classroom."

During their final semesters at Hope, most education students work as teacher candidates in West Michigan-based public, charter, and private schools. Some, however, decide to student teach outside of Michigan, through off-campus programs like the Chicago Semester and the Philadelphia Semester.

"Hope education students possess the skills and knowledge necessary to be effective and collaborative teachers. As I interact with teachers and principals around the country, they speak often about how well-prepared our teachers are, how easily they adapt to new contexts, and how passionate they are about teaching all children."

— Dr. Laura Pardo,
professor of education and chairperson of the department

"These programs provide a chance for students to hone their skills in a unique educational setting outside of western Michigan," said Nancy Cook, professor of education and director of student teaching.

Through a relationship with Interaction International, an organization that places student teachers in schools throughout the world, the department has also begun to offer opportunities for students to teach in nations like Thailand and India.

Lane will be teaching at Rosslyn Academy, an international Christian school located near Nairobi, Kenya, this fall. "I will be observing initially and then teaching full-time, planning and implementing daily lessons, assessing students, and providing different learning opportunities for many different learners," she said.

"Students have a wide range of experiences to choose from," said Dr. Laura Pardo, professor of education and chairperson of the department. "It not only helps them find their niche, but also helps them see that teaching isn't prescriptive."

Last spring, Spencer Vanderheide, a senior and special education major from Grandville, Mich., had a field placement at Holland's Woodside Elementary. This fall, he is student teaching in a ninth-grade special needs classroom at Hudsonville High School.

"My day-to-day responsibilities will change each week. At first, I will work on building rapport with students," said Vanderheide. "Eventually I will create entire units and take over as a full-time teacher."

The array of placements and student-teaching opportunities is matched by the breadth of degree options available to students. The department offers seven majors and four minors at the Elementary Certification level and 23 majors and 14 minors at the Secondary Certification level. The most recent additions include a program in Early Childhood Education, which focuses on the development of children from birth to age eight.

"With the introduction of that program this fall semester, we will eventually be placing student teachers in preschool and infant programs in the near future as well," Professor Cook said.

Beyond their formal coursework, students may also choose to serve with local organizations that work with children, such as the Children's After School Achievement (CASA) or the Boys & Girls Clubs of America.

Other students participate in student-led chapters of two national professional organizations, the Council for Exceptional Children (CEC) and the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development (ASCD). The organizations provide workshops and set up panels, featuring guest speakers who live and teach throughout the United States.

Senior Spencer Vanderheide student-taught at Holland's Woodside Elementary last semester and is at Hudsonville High School this semester. When they student teach, Hope students have already had several placements in classrooms, beginning with their first course in the education program, "Educational Psychology."

All of the experiences weave together to prepare students in six professional abilities – effective communication, professional collaboration, curriculum development, problem solving, decision making, and scholarly education – by the time they graduate, alumni of a program that has been readying teachers to shape young lives for more than 150 years.

"Hope education students possess the skills and knowledge necessary to be effective and collaborative teachers," Dr. Pardo said. "As I interact with teachers and principals around the country, they speak often about how well-prepared our teachers are, how easily they adapt to new contexts, and how passionate they are about teaching all children." 🐦

Student-teaching placements around the country as well as abroad provide a range of options and opportunities for learning. Senior Lindsey Lane is student-teaching this semester in Nairobi, Kenya.

Dance Research a Holistic Ideal

Researchers from three academic divisions have worked together on a dance study that has earned international attention

By Greg Chandler

Much like an athlete who experiences “butterflies” in his or her stomach in anticipation of a big game, dancers often go through similar feelings of nervousness and anxiety before they take the stage to perform.

The interdisciplinary study has earned a variety of honors, including being chosen for presentation this month during the annual International Association of Dance Medicine and Science conference in Singapore. The student researchers are pictured last spring at a venue closer to home, the college’s annual Celebration of Undergraduate Research and Creative Performance at the DeVos Fieldhouse. From left to right are Allyson Dreger ’12, senior Rachel Cho, Heather Stiff ’12 and senior Ariana Cappuccitti.

Hope seniors Ariana Cappuccitti, of Mount Prospect, Ill., and Rachel Cho, of Barrington, Ill., both know that experience first-hand, having been part of the college’s dance program. But they’ve taken that experience one step farther – using their interest in science, as well as dance, to learn about the physiology and psychology behind those feelings.

Cho and Cappuccitti have spent the past two years taking part in a unique interdisciplinary research project, involving the departments of dance, biology and psychology, to analyze anxiety levels of dancers and how they differ between rehearsal and performance, as well as before and after performances.

“Dancers, performers and athletes all talk about getting in ‘the zone,’ and this was an empirical way to describe that,” said Cappuccitti, a double major in dance and psychology.

The study, which involved 73 dance students from Hope, measured the amount of cortisol – a hormone that is released in response to stress – in the saliva of dancers. Participants were also asked about their mental state, before and after rehearsals and before and after performances, through a series of questions.

“I was immediately attracted to the research because I have been looking for ways to combine my two passions – dance and science,” said Cho, a double major in dance and chemistry who is planning to attend medical school after she graduates from Hope in May.

The study found anxiety levels among the dancers were higher before performances than prior to rehearsals. However, dancers with more experience – at least 10 years of training – were less anxious both before taking the stage and after performance, said Linda Graham, professor of dance and the department’s chairperson.

“We’ve had the anecdotal evidence (about anxiety levels), but this is data that proves what we already knew,” said Professor Graham, who was joined in advising the students on the research project by Dr. Greg Fraley, associate professor of biology, and Dr. Lorna Hernandez Jarvis, professor of psychology and director of general education and interdisciplinary studies.

“It shows we need to have performance as a regular and integrated part of our (dance) education curriculum,” Professor Graham added.

Hope dance students have an opportunity to take part in four student-produced concerts each year, as well as an annual mainstage concert every March and theatre productions. They also can join one of several affiliated companies, including dANCEpROjECt, IDT (formerly InSync Dance Theatre) and Strike Time

Even at Hope where the emphasis is on making connections between disciplines, the collaborative research project “Physiological and psychological anxiety levels in dancers during performance compared to rehearsal” stands out. Faculty from three departments--biology, dance and psychology--together have been mentoring students in conducting the study, through which the team examined the experience of 73 dance students by measuring their cortisol levels and via a survey. The department of dance emphasizes performance opportunities for its students as a key component of their education, scheduling multiple concerts during each school year. Pictured is “Sur La Table” choreographed by faculty member Steven Iannaccone, performed during Dance 37; by dANCEpROjECt; and in February 2012 during the “Michigan 5” collegiate showcase concert at the Berman Center for the Performing Arts in West Bloomfield, Mich.

Dance Company. Some 120 students are either majoring or minoring in dance.

Dr. Fraley, who has studied the impact of stress on brain activity, says the research showed experienced dancers can self-regulate their stress levels before they go to perform.

“The dancers that have had a lot of experience being on stage, immediately before they walk on stage, their stress hormones dropped to baseline, non-stress levels,” said Dr. Fraley, a fourth-degree black belt in Taekwondo who also teaches martial arts classes at Hope. “They’re able to dial it down.”

Cappuccitti discovered through the research that the dancers’ mind and body did not always experience the same things at the same time.

“Dancers mentally feel more anxiety before performance, but their body is less stressed, and dancers feel less anxious after (performance), but their body is experiencing high levels of stress,” she said.

Dr. Jarvis’ involvement with the study gave her a chance to reconnect with her roots. Before entering the academic world and study of psychology, she danced for six years as a member of Mexico’s national ballet company.

“It gave me an opportunity to use my training as a scientist to look at dance with a new eye,” Dr. Jarvis said.

Dr. Jarvis says as a liberal arts institution, Hope has afforded the opportunity for many students to combine their interest in dance with other academic pursuits. “You don’t have to be just a biologist, you don’t have to be just a psychologist, you don’t have to be just a dancer,” she said.

The research project actually dates back to 2005, when Krista Stanton ’07, a dual major in dance and biology, approached Professor Graham about doing an independent study project involving performance anxiety among dancers. Stanton had done some research into such issues among athletes, but had not found any comparable research into what happens with dancers, Professor Graham said.

Stanton’s initial research, conducted with Professor Graham and Dr. Fraley, was presented to the International Association for Dance Medicine and Science in 2008.

The most recent research, which also included participation from Hope graduates Allyson Dreger ’12, of Kalamazoo, Mich., and Heather Stiff ’12, of Galena, Ohio, received a research award from the Midwestern chapter of Psi Chi, the international honor society in psychology, in May. Students also presented their research during Hope’s Celebration of Undergraduate Research and Creative Performance last spring, and at the Van Andel Institute’s West Michigan Regional Undergraduate Science Research Conference.

Ariana Cappuccitti and Rachel Cho will give a poster presentation on the research project at the International Association of Dance Medicine and Science conference in Singapore in late October. Professor Graham says the project demonstrates what can happen when students and faculty members can work together across multiple disciplines.

“We’re at a liberal arts institution that values the whole being, and this is a research project that reflects that totality of mind, body and soul,” she said. “This is as cross-disciplinary as you can get.”

Rachel Cho believes her dual major and participation in the research study has helped prepare her well for medical school and life after she leaves Hope next spring.

“My science classes have taught me important analyzing and critical thinking skills while my dance classes have taught me to be more creative and think outside of the box,” she said.

Ariana Cappuccitti agrees. “This experience has made me a quicker problem solver in the moment of high stress and little time. It has also taught me how to work with people,” she said.

Even as the students recognize the ways that they have gained through the research experience, their mentors celebrate their contributions to the process, not least of all their central role not only in conducting the research but in identifying the subject itself. It’s what makes research at Hope truly collaborative, and a learning experience that has a lasting impact.

“It’s really student-driven. The students ask the questions. We’re here (as faculty members) to help facilitate answering those questions,” Professor Graham said. 🙌

Washington Internship Provides Historic Opportunity

Senior Joel Hartleroad of Waterford, Mich., was hoping for a meaningful internship when he signed up for the college's spring 2012 Washington Honors Semester and applied to work with the U.S. Department of State.

He found it and then some, serving on the department's task force responsible for planning the May 2012 NATO Summit in Chicago, Ill., and then rounding out the experience as part of the team staffing the event.

Joel Hartleroad's opportunities at Hope have also included the opportunity to participate in collaborative research in political science, working with Dr. Jack Holmes on an analysis of long-term trends in U.S. foreign policy.

That he was about to have a unique experience became apparent during his first day in January. He arrived anticipating that he'd be part of a group of students hailing from a variety of colleges and universities. As his orientation proceeded and he didn't see any others, he asked his supervisor about them.

"I said, 'Where are the other interns?'" Hartleroad recalled. "She said, 'You're the intern.'"

He immediately became the seventh member of the summit's planning group. His colleagues were a trans-diplomatic Fellow from Croatia, an Air Force major, three senior diplomats and a public-relations specialist who was also a diplomat.

"That itself was just flooring," he said. They put him to work immediately, giving him a 150-page background memo to absorb on the go. The summit, after all, was only four months away.

Hartleroad, who is an international studies major, liked the challenge. "You had to hit the ground floor running, but it was totally worth it," he said.

His responsibilities during the months in advance of the summit included running the secure website used for sharing materials related to the event; developing a handbook for the summit's delegates and liaison officers; and assisting NATO's deputy assistant secretary general, from scheduling meetings with

Senior Joel Hartleroad not only had a chance to see history being made but the opportunity to assist in the process through his recent internship with the State Department through the college's Washington ambassadors, to communicating back-and-forth with a variety of foreign embassies. Often, the others were working with him on the same tasks.

"You didn't just necessarily have one specific role," Hartleroad said. "It was all so interconnected that your role overlapped with somebody else's."

During the May 20-21 summit itself, he served as a liaison officer, assisting the delegation from Latvia. His memorable experiences included being present while President Barack Obama and NATO Secretary General Anders Fogh Rasmussen of Denmark made their opening statements.

"The experience that I cherish the most was being able to see the actual room," he said. "When you go in, you just have to pause because there sitting in front of you are the leaders of the world, and you're just absolutely in awe."

At the same time, he also appreciated the opportunity to gain a more down-to-earth

Honors Semester. He was part of the team that planned the May NATO Summit in Chicago, Ill., and then worked at the event itself as a liaison officer assisting the Latvian delegation.

perspective, such as while discussing hockey with Latvia's foreign minister as they walked along Chicago's Lake Michigan coast during a break from events.

"At that moment I gained a greater respect not only for who they are but also a greater insight that they are just like you and me," he said.

It's experience and perspective that he feels will serve him well no matter where next life leads.

"You will always remember you were there and in some small way contributed to making something a success," he said. "I don't know if I will necessarily plan a NATO summit in my life ever again, but it is something that will always carry with me all of my life wherever I go."

Dr. Jack Holmes, a professor of political science who has been conducting collaborative research with Hartleroad, gives Hartleroad credit for making the most of the chances his semester provided.

"Joel clearly had a great opportunity and did a great job with that," he said. "He's good at managing time and getting things done that need to be done. When you put a lot into a program, you're going to get a lot out of it."

Milestone experiences are a tradition and goal of the college's long-running Washington Honors Semester, which began in the 1970s. Across the decades students have had internships with a variety of government agencies, non-governmental organizations, companies, congressional offices, the White House and many more. Although coordinated through the college's department of political science, the program and internship placements aren't discipline-specific; students interested pursuing a variety of majors have participated in the semester through the years.

Such off-campus programs—and Hope offers many, both domestically and abroad—are an important and unique opportunity for growth that complements students' on-campus experience.

"What you do is get used to and exposed to a different world, a different set of expectations," said Dr. Holmes, who has led the Washington, D.C., semester many times through the years (members of the faculty share the responsibility). "Students focus much better when they're back here because they see where they want to go and how they want to get there."

Hartleroad has been enjoying all of the opportunities that he has found at Hope. He spent the fall 2011 semester in Freiburg, Germany, visiting multiple nations (Austria, Belgium, the Czech Republic, France, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Spain and the Vatican) as he studied the functioning of the European Union. During his time abroad, he saw the Pope give Mass in Germany (and was pleased to find that he could follow the German-language sermon) and saw the U.S. ambassador to Germany.

"To be honest, the last year of my life has been filled with complete surprises and I feel all too fortunate to be in the position that I was," he said.

He appreciates the range of programs available at Hope and that the college enables students to forge them together in a personalized way, and encourages other students to take advantage of them.

"Not only has Hope given me the tools to do something like this, but they've given me the opportunity," he said. "I cannot say enough about the internship opportunity through the Washington Honors Semester program."

"Going abroad to Germany in combination with the D.C. program, I don't know of another school that provides the opportunity to leave for a year," he said. "It's worth it, 10 times, the amount that I'm paying in tuition."

Back in the States, his research with Dr. Holmes has involved working on Dr. Holmes's on-going analysis of long-term trends in U.S. foreign policy. They and senior Sa'eed Husaini of Jos, Nigeria, are developing a paper together. They worked on the project this past summer and are continuing this semester. It's likewise experience that he values.

"Here I feel like every professor would definitely favor writing a paper with a student and helping propel them on to the next stage, which Dr. Holmes has done for me, as opposed to at a bigger college or university," he said.

Graduating in December, Hartleroad is still working out the path he will follow next. Buoyed by his experiences in both Europe and with the State Department, he is interested in working as a policy-maker in either international business or government in international relations.

In any case, he wants to make a difference, equipped through his time at Hope with a sense of what that could look like.

"I truly, deep down want to make sure that I've helped make at least one person's life better, if not a larger group," he said. "That's what motivates me." 🐦

"You will always remember you were there and in some small way contributed to making something a success... I don't know if I will necessarily plan a NATO summit in my life ever again, but it is something that will always carry with me all of my life wherever I go."

Mosaic of Hope

Always, Hope has been a team effort.

The transformational learning that takes place at the college relies on a dedicated faculty and staff who devote themselves to the students in their care, and it owes no less to the alumni and friends whose support makes a Hope education possible. It has been that way from the beginning, with every student benefiting from the generosity of those who came before.

The A Greater Hope comprehensive campaign seeks to make an even more outstanding Hope by providing exceptional facilities and resources that will serve students for generations to come. It is a vision being made reality one gift at a time, each reflecting the difference Hope made, a life led and a desire to help others in turn--and every gift and more essential. 🙌

Brian Yarch '99 Grand Rapids, Mich.

It wasn't any one thing that drew Brian Yarch '99 to Hope as a student. It was everything. "I didn't pick Hope because of any specific program, but because of its reputation as a strong Christian school that provided a well-balanced educational experience," he said.

He made the most of opportunities both on-campus and off. He majored in business administration, economics and German, and had an internship with John Hancock. He enjoyed Chapel and focusing on service through Habitat for Humanity, and studying abroad in Germany for a year.

"The four years I spent at Hope made a lasting impact on my life," he said. "I grew spiritually and overall in life. I have a lot of great memories and built some long-lasting relationships."

Today he is the chief operating officer and a managing partner with Regal Financial Group LLC, with additional senior roles with Regal Investment Advisors LLC and Regulus Advisors LLC, and is a registered representative with American Portfolios Financial Services Inc. He also serves as a deacon and treasurer at his church, and with wife Courtney is busy with the couple's three young children.

The Yarchs have supported the campaign with a planned gift, including Hope among the beneficiaries of their family trust. They have left the gift undesignated so that the college can use it where it will do the most good.

"Being a church treasurer, I realize that the leadership of the organization has a better handle on the needs of the organization than an individual person," he said. "I also trust that Hope will make the best decisions in using our gift to meet needs at the college."

Sarah Lokers '08 Wixson and Matt Wixson '08 Ann Arbor, Mich.

Even as they have been starting out with their post-Hope lives, Matt Wixson '08 and Sarah Lokers '08 Wixson have made a point of giving back to the college every year since graduation.

"Both Sarah and I believe strongly in the value of a Hope College education," Matt said. "Hope's mission is one that we identify with, to grow hard-working citizens who are rooted in the Christian faith."

"Given the current economic situation in our country and the ever-increasing squeeze on liberal arts (and all other) institutions, it is important to give back in any way we can to a place that provided so much," he said. "I believe that Hope has been good stewards of the gifts given, and I trust that donations will be used in the best possible way to further the college's impact on future generations."

Matt completed medical school this past May and started his residency in June. Sarah has completed a J.D. and accepted a position with Secrest Wardle. Their active lives have also included joining a local Reformed church, buying their first house and adopting a puppy. They've designated their gifts to the Hope Fund, which provides operating support college-wide and thus impacts every student daily.

"Since the Hope Fund is aimed toward student life, it feels very natural to direct our contributions there," Matt said. "Both Sarah and I personally benefitted from the work of the Hope Fund, so it is great to pay it forward."

$154 million raised (88%)

The largest single fundraising effort in the college's history, the $175 million A Greater Hope comprehensive campaign will benefit every student as it strengthens the college's endowment, adds several new buildings, and supports immediate needs through the annual Hope Fund. For more information, and to explore supporting the college through the campaign, please visit Hope on-line at campaign.hope.edu or contact Mary Remenschneider, campaign director, at remenschneider@hope.edu or (616) 395-7775.

Images of the Hope of today reflect timeless experience. Clockwise from top center: chemistry research; singing in the Chapel Choir; learning abroad in Vienna; an exhibition in De Pree; and studying in the Pine Grove.

Joan TenCate '63 Bonnette South Haven, Mich.

As a student, teacher and creator of art, Joan TenCate '63 Bonnette appreciates the difference that outstanding space can make. It was a visit to some of the world's best that prompted her to become one of Hope's first art majors. "I attended Hope's Vienna Summer School and I was very inspired by the art galleries we visited in Europe," she said.

After Hope, she completed her K-12 teaching certification and a master's, taught in the Livonia Public Schools, and led art workshops for local groups. She's also been an artist throughout her life, with work in a variety of competitive exhibitions.

When she was at Hope, the department of art had two faculty and was on the fourth floor of Lubbers Hall. She's appreciated the growth in the program in the years since, and is pleased to be supporting a new era by contributing to the Kruizenga Art Museum.

Tom Henderson '70 Dayton, Ohio

Supporting the music facility and concert hall through a lead gift for a practice room named in honor of former Chapel Choir director Robert Cavanaugh was a natural choice for Dr. Tom Henderson '70 and his wife, Charlotte. "Every time many of us who are Chapel Choir alumni hear the Alma Mater we think of Hope College and our beloved director 'Prof,'" he said.

Returning through the years to participate in the Alumni Chapel Choir during Homecoming, he's come to appreciate the group's quality even more than he did as a student, and to understand the need for the new building. "It made me realize how much more the choir and many other music groups could do with an acoustically improved concert hall," he said.

Tom majored in chemistry and became a doctor after Hope. He is a specialist in rheumatology (arthritis), and has spent the past 25 years practicing in Dayton.

"My experience at Hope was the highlight of my life," he said. "I was able to participate in many areas while growing academically and religiously."

"I have chosen to support Hope financially because I am very appreciative for the high quality education that I received and the people that I met," he said. "I was blessed to be able to pursue a successful career. I enjoy giving back to the college and supporting many projects on campus."

Todd VanderVeen '95 and Carrie Maines '98 VanderVeen Arlington Heights, Ill.

Todd VanderVeen '95 and Carrie Maines '98 VanderVeen each found much to treasure at Hope.

"Hope provided me with the professional tools I needed to succeed," Todd said. "My advisor, Professor Tom Smith, was there as a professor, mentor and friend for me. And participating in the London Business May Term with Professor Tony Muiderman helped me better understand global business strategies, while forming lifelong memories."

"I'm hoping that the museum expands the educational possibilities especially for people who are interested in visual arts," she said. "There can be opportunities for training people in museum administration, the business of art, as docents, preparing exhibitions, restoring artwork, and the research and cataloging of objects in the college's own collection."

She is also looking forward to the new building as a patron.

"I have stopped in over the years to see the exhibits in De Pree, and the quality has been excellent," she said. "And with bigger space, the college will have many more opportunities."

"Many things stand out to me from my time at Hope College," Carrie said. "Music practice at Nykerk—morning, noon and night. Being blessed to travel the world through amazing opportunities such as Symphonette and my Senior Seminar at Vienna Summer School. The personal interactions with my professors. And, creating lifelong friendships."

Carrie's degree in mathematics and music performance led her to Aon Hewitt, where she is now a lead systems analyst within benefits implementations. Todd's degree in business administration took him to Allstate, where he is now a state manager.

Their support of the campaign reflects a rich mix of experiences, and includes the Hope Fund, music facility and concert hall, the department of economics and business administration, and a scholarship focused on diversity.

"We give back to Hope in appreciation of the opportunities we had as students," they noted. "We have been blessed in our life and feel it's important to show our support to the college and its future."

Highlights of the Summer Stage

An era has ended with the retirement of Mary Schakel '69, who has been involved with Hope Summer Repertory Theatre for all but one of HSRT's 41 years.

She joined HSRT for its first season in 1972 as costume designer, returning to the same role in 1974 after a year away. She became managing director in 1979, and from 1984 through the most recent season was the producing director.

Friends of HSRT were joined by current and past members of the company in paying tribute to her on Sunday, Aug. 5, at the Holland Area Arts Council.

To further commemorate Schakel's tenure and impact, and not least of all to celebrate HSRT itself, News from Hope College asked her to reflect on her favorite productions across the past 41 seasons. Perhaps that would be a top-five list, or perhaps a top-10 list... or perhaps not. Since 1972, HSRT has produced 162 mainstage shows, 114 Children's Performance Troupe shows, 26 Second-Stage or "Bonus" shows and 12 Cabaret shows, 314 total at a variety of venues both on campus and in the surrounding community.

And so instead here is a broader-than-10 mix of highlights from more than four decades of outstanding summer theatre at Hope, presented with the understanding that even it shouldn't be considered "final." That's what happens when every season, every production, is a labor of love.

"As I look back, I find that I have chosen most of them based on performances of wonderful actors. In some cases it has been because of the struggles the whole creative team had on a given show, and how they dealt positively, and a great production was the result," Schakel said.

"And look at the ones that have been left off the list," she said. "I am second-guessing everything on my list now, as I write this."

A Midsummer Night's Dream (2006), with Hillary Parker as Titania

"Three of my favorite plays, which HSRT then translated into great productions: A Midsummer Night's Dream (1974, 1988, 2006) I remember the first one most fondly because some of our earliest company members, with whom I am still friends, were in that production—among others are Tom Stechschulte, Kim Zimmer, A.C. Weary, Alan Suddeth, Bill Tewinkle, Nancy Sigworth, Richie Hoeler and the late Brad Williams.

Ah Wilderness (1972 & 1983). I love that play and remember both productions fondly, the first because it was the first summer and the cast included my 'future' sister-in-law, Deborah Noe Schakel and the 1983 production because it was the first time I collaborated with fellow designer Joseph Flauto.

Death of a Salesman (1977). Simply a great play, which we did well!"

Editor's Note: Mary Schakel '69 was featured in the December 2007 issue of News from Hope College, which is available in pdf form on the college's website.

hope.edu/pr/nfhc

"One loves plays and productions for many different reasons. Art, by Yasmina Reza is probably my single favorite of everything we have done. It represented the synergy of many factors. In my final costume design effort I was blessed to work with the 'dream team'. The cast, David Colacci, James Saba and Dana Snyder, was directed by Tom Bullard and the design team was headed by one of my favorite colleagues, Joseph Flauto. We did that one in 2004."

Art (2004), with James Saba, Dana Snyder and David Colacci

The Importance of Being Earnest (1993), with Thaddaeus Smith and Gail Rastorfer

Other past productions I have loved: The Importance of Being Earnest (1977 and 1993), The Tempest (1999), Billy Bishop Goes to War (1987 and 1997), A Trip to Bountiful (1997), The Game of Love and Chance (2003), Harvey (1988), Rumors (2001), The Foreigner (1987 and 2008), To Kill a Mockingbird (1997), The Road to Mecca (1990), and Bedroom Farce (2005).

"It is harder for us to reach a solid level of production in musicals than in plays because of the technical and financial challenges. Musicals I have loved and of which I have been proud:

Oklahoma (1975)
Godspell (2007)
Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat (1982 and 2000)
1776 (1992)
Beehive (1995)
Anything Goes (1989)
The Human Comedy (1991)
Pump Boys and Dinettes (1988 and 1989)
Spitfire Grill (2005)
The Children of Eden (2011)

"The above are not entered in any particular order. If I had to pick a single favorite among all of the above, it would have to be 1776. The artistic synergy in that production was at such a high level, that I am quite sure that we could never replicate it. As then Dean Bobby Fong said about our outstanding and successful production of Twelfth Night, 'If we could bottle it, we'd all be rich!'"

1776 (1992), with Brett Halna du Fretay as Thomas Jefferson, David Colacci as John Adams and Brad Williams '73 as Benjamin Franklin

History in Action

Hope history students contributed to the community by developing research papers for use as background by the artists developing proposals for Holland's "Scenes from South Shore" mural project. Pictured is one of the five murals completed this summer, a celebration of Holland's ship-building heritage by artist Jessica Miller.

Hope history students played a behind-the-scenes role in a highly visible addition to a neighborhood on Holland's southwest side.

The students developed 20 research papers made available as background information for the artists who developed proposals for the ongoing "Scenes from South Shore" community mural project. Highlighting aspects of Holland's history, the initiative produced five murals this summer with another five planned for each of the next two years. The murals adorn the outer walls of businesses in the South Shore Village neighborhood on Holland's southwest side.

The concept was initiated by the City of Holland as part of its neighborhood enhancement program and developed in conjunction with merchants and residents of South Shore Village. The selections were made by a neighborhood committee based on the proposals, and the murals completed in August.

To support the variety of themes the organizers hoped to see the artists address across the duration of the effort, the students covered local-history topics ranging from Chief Joseph Waukazoo, to area boat-building companies and the Great Lakes liners that used to anchor in Holland, to Holland's H.J. Heinz Company factory. The reports, along with background from other sources, were posted on the project's online "Call to Artists" page, providing details and inspiration for the artists.

"Hope College made that one step easier for them, so that the artists had some information available to them," said Lorma Williams '76 Freestone, executive director of the Holland Area Arts Council, which helped out by hosting the web page and using other communication tools to get the word out about the project. "It was really helpful. It was a springboard for where the artists went with some of their submissions."

Dr. Marc Baer, professor of history and chairperson of the department, recruited the students, who were history majors and minors, in response to the organizers' request for help. He noted that the project presented a solid opportunity to serve the community while also supporting the department's emphasis on providing meaningful opportunities for students to develop and apply a variety of skills.

"The department provides real-world skills through its courses, including thinking through a project assignment and coming up with a plan for carrying it out; conceptualizing research strategies; locating appropriate sources and analyzing them, and writing both to inform and persuade," he said.

"My sense from reading the students' essays is that the project gave the students involved an excellent experience in that it encompassed all these skills," Dr. Baer said. "In no case did I need to look over their shoulders, and in very few cases did I even have to do light editing. As most of us today are asked to produce professional and cogent writing with strict length limits and deadlines, I would recommend any of these students to a variety of employers."

In addition to reflecting student scholarship, the completed project even features Hope visually. Mural painter Conrad Kaufman included the college's Martha Miller Center for Global Communication in his exploration of Holland's legacy buildings, along with landmarks such as downtown's Tower Clock building and the former Ottawa Beach Hotel.

This Time, It's Personal

By Greg Olgers '87

Can it really be time for our son, David, to be starting college? Who said that these 18 years could pass so quickly? From first words and first steps to this new step into adulthood and building a life of his own, it's all happened way too soon.

Although we're still adjusting to that particular shock, his mother (Kathy Hogenboom '85 Olgers) and I are thrilled with his college choice. Now, it'd probably be a surprise if I didn't say that. After all, I've worked at Hope since 1988. The cause-and-effect, though, runs the other way. I joined the staff because I had a terrific experience as a student and found that Hope really did live out, in large ways and small, all the things that it said it was.

To have seen it continue to be true and to watch Hope make a difference to thousands of students across about a generation has been a joy. It's all been there: outstanding faculty and staff who care about the students and take a real interest in them as individuals, strong academics that connect with students in so many ways, an ecumenical Christian character concerned with engaging with the world, co-curricular activities that themselves change lives, and friendships that last a lifetime.

This fall, our first child has the opportunity, and so we find ourselves parking our sedan on 13th Street during Move-In Day, Friday, Aug. 24, a riot of crates, tubs and boxes filled with everything we could think to include based on our collective best effort as a family to equip David for the coming year.

We are immediately greeted by a team of students, volunteers all, whose sole purpose is to empty our vehicle and whisk its contents to David's room. By the time we arrive on campus in the late morning they've already been at it for 1.5 hours with many more to go, and it's warm and humid, and yet they're cheerful and welcoming, and make short work of a task that would have taken us multiple trips. Plus, they know where in the building the room is.

College is a major transition for parents as well as students. Hope makes it easier across all of Orientation Weekend, starting with arrival Friday morning when student volunteers offer cheerful greetings and then proceed to unload the car and carry every item inside. The goodbyes Sunday evening are still difficult, but everything in between reinforces that we are leaving our child at not only an outstanding educational institution, but a good place. Pictured with Greg '87, incoming freshman David and Kathy Hogenboom '85 Olgers are sophomore Orientation Assistants Adela Aguilera of Freeland, Mich., and Eva Balich of Three Oaks, Mich.

The upperclassmen are a good indication of what we will encounter the entire weekend: a personal touch and a genuine desire to help make Orientation Weekend a good experience for the new students and their families alike. We also see it just a few minutes later when we reach the room and find the door bedecked with multiple notes of welcome. As we're helping David settle in across the afternoon, several members of the residence life staff, and others from the college, visit room-to-room to introduce themselves and ask if any of us have questions or need any help.

We'd already met David's roommate, Jordan, during the summer when the two of them made a point of getting together after exchanging e-mails a few times. Today we enjoy meeting his family as well.

A couple years ago, mercifully, the college eliminated the construction of home-made lofts in favor of "loftable" bed frames provided as standard equipment. Our experience is thus definitely easier than that of the generations who often came to campus equipped with trailer loads of lumber and occasionally power tools, but even the pre-fab components require a bit of fiddling. We work well together in common cause, though, and ultimately get the room's furnishings arranged to our sons' taste. Actually, I think it's a nice chance to bond a bit.

The students' Orientation activities begin Friday evening and run through Monday, with the activities for families spanning Friday through shortly after the Opening Convocation Sunday afternoon. Kathy and I considered skipping many of the family events, particularly the structured presentations, since we like to think that we know the college pretty well. Repeatedly, though, colleagues whose children had attended Hope encouraged us to go, noting that we'd find the experience both informative and affirming.

I'm glad that we listened. Across the weekend, we're impressed and reassured by the heart and caliber of the people making the presentations, on topics ranging from the Center for Writing and Research, to "Now that I Am the Parent of a Hope Student," to Campus Ministries, to the Phelps Scholars Program in which David is participating (the parents even get to attend as our students have their introductory class session Saturday afternoon). Certainly I know from working with them these many years that the people at Hope care deeply about what they do and are outstanding as they do it, but (and this sounds like an action-movie tag line) this time, it's personal.

Oh, my, is it personal.

I realize that the change for our family is much gentler than for many. After all, I can even see David's residence hall from my office window.

This transition, though, isn't really about geography. President James Bultman '63 says it during the opening session in Dimnent Memorial Chapel on Saturday, and there are more than a few tears in the audience as we hear expressed what I suspect most of us have been handling individually so far, especially as we've focused on being excited for our children and helping them with their adjustment. Recalling his own experience as a college parent, he notes, "This is a change in our lives. We're sending off our most prized possession to the care of another person." Parents' Council chairs Keith and Tracy Kreb make the same point during their remarks: "After 18 years, the process of letting go isn't easy."

Of course, we don't own our children. It's more that we're granted the privilege of borrowing them for a while, and our part of the bargain includes doing our best to prepare these precious, remarkable, developing humans to leave even as they become the most important part of our lives. The relationship remains at that point, but the roles change, and their decisions become ever more their own.

If I could have a selfish wish, it would be to stop the clock or even turn it back and keep hanging on, but, since I don't get that one, my hope as David grows into independence is that the connections that he makes in his life will be good for him as he continues to become. Clearly we'll still be there for him, always, but increasingly he will find his path shaped by experiences outside of our involvement.

College is a part of that process, from search and selection through all the learning and growth that take place across the years which follow. While we can guide and advise, the choice and how they live into it is ultimately each student's, and we can only hope that they choose a place that will be a light for them that will itself prepare them well for the stages to come. I can think of no place I'd rather see David spend his undergraduate years than Hope, where the emphasis is on educating the whole person and the community is supportive. As Orientation co-director and Hope senior Ellen Milroy said during her remarks to us on Saturday, "Your child will be loved and cared for by the people of Hope College."

It doesn't eliminate the sting of having David absent from our daily lives, but it helps. I'm also grateful that he's enthused about this next stage in his life. That's as it should be, and it also helps.

Knowing that I'd be writing this story, he takes time to send me a note after his first day of class: "I really like being here. All of the people here are really nice and I think it's a really great environment to be in. I'm excited that classes started, and think it'll be a good year." 🙌

Settling in included working with David's roommate Jordan Hill and his family to figure out how to loft the beds provided by the college, to provide a bit more space. Although the process managed to present challenges of its own, generations of parents will recognize that it was still a far sight easier than starting from scratch. From left to right are Jordan Hill, David Olgers, Jordan's father Tim Hill and Greg Olgers '87.

History in Action

Hope history students contributed to the community by developing research papers for use as background by the artists developing proposals for Holland's "Scenes from South Shore" mural project. Pictured is one of the five murals completed this summer, a celebration of Holland's ship-building heritage by artist Jessica Miller.

Hope history students played a behind-the-scenes role in a highly visible addition to a neighborhood on Holland's southwest side.

The students developed 20 research papers made available as background information for the artists who developed proposals for the ongoing "Scenes from South Shore" community mural project. Highlighting aspects of Holland's history, the initiative produced five murals this summer with another five planned for each of the next two years. The murals adorn the outer walls of businesses in the South Shore Village neighborhood on Holland's southwest side.

The concept was initiated by the City of Holland as part of its neighborhood enhancement program and developed in conjunction with merchants and residents of South Shore Village. The selections were made by a neighborhood committee based on the proposals, and the murals completed in August.

To support the variety of themes the organizers hoped to see the artists address across the duration of the effort, the students covered local-history topics ranging from Chief Joseph Waukazoo, to area boat-building companies and the Great Lakes liners that used to anchor in Holland, to Holland's H.J. Heinz Company factory. The reports, along with background from other sources, were posted on the project's online "Call to Artists" page, providing details and inspiration for the artists.

"Hope College made that one step easier for them, so that the artists had some information available to them," said Lorma Williams '76 Freestone, executive director of the Holland Area Arts Council, which helped out by hosting the web page and using other communication tools to get the word out about the project. "It was really helpful. It was a springboard for where the artists went with some of their submissions."

Dr. Marc Baer, professor of history and chairperson of the department, recruited the students, who were history majors and minors, in response to the organizers' request for help. He noted that the project presented a solid opportunity to serve the community while also supporting the department's emphasis on providing meaningful opportunities for students to develop and apply a variety of skills.

"The department provides real-world skills through its courses, including thinking through a project assignment and coming up with a plan for carrying it out; conceptualizing research strategies; locating appropriate sources and analyzing them, and writing both to inform and persuade," he said.

"My sense from reading the students' essays is that the project gave the students involved an excellent experience in that it encompassed all these skills," Dr. Baer said. "In no case did I need to look over their shoulders, and in very few cases did I even have to do light editing. As most of us today are asked to produce professional and cogent writing with strict length limits and deadlines, I would recommend any of these

In addition to reflecting student scholarship, the completed project even features Hope visually. Mural painter Conrad Kaufman included the college's Martha Miller Center for Global Communication in his exploration of Holland's legacy buildings, along with landmarks such as downtown's Tower Clock building and the former Ottawa Beach Hotel.

Awards mean a lot, but they don't say it all. The people in baseball mean more to me than statistics."

When you are writing a column published in October on the topic of alumni awards, why not start it off with an Ernie Banks quote? Plus, when you have an audience that includes many with an affinity for the Windy City, quoting Mr. Cub is sure to generate a few smiles.

However, the real reason for referencing this Hall of Famer's take on recognition and relationships is that Hope recently honored three alumni, presenting Young Alumni Awards to Dan Capps '98 and Seth '97 and Stephanie '97 Kaper-Dale. Dan has hiked the full length of the Appalachian Trail; earned multiple master's degrees; volunteered in the Peace Corps; earned his Ph.D. in science education; helped found a non-profit; and spoken to Hope students back on campus; and currently serves as assistant professor of science education at the University of Maine, where he is passionate about teaching and teacher education.

Seth and Stephanie have both received Master of Divinity degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary. They have volunteered at a children's home in Ecuador and currently serve as co-pastors of the Reformed Church of Highland Park in New Jersey, where they advocate for the environment, lead an effort to provide low-cost housing to serve young women who have aged out of foster care, and have most recently made headlines by actively helping Indonesian immigrants avoid deportation.

These three could easily put impressive numbers to their accomplishments by tallying up the students taught, articles published, residents housed, and immigrants helped. However, as Ernie would say, it's not about the statistics. Their priority has been on making a difference in the lives of others. That's also an emphasis at the alma mater they share, and it is a privilege for the Alumni Association to honor them for lives well led.

Window to Hope's History

A Hope tradition since 1898, the venerable Pull tug-of-war here continues on Friday, Oct. 6, 1972, as the sophomore Class of '75 vies with the freshmen of '76. The sophomores won the contest, besting the opposition in 54 minutes ('76 went on to a sophomore victory the following fall). Forty years separate this particular Pull from the most recent installment, held on Saturday, Sept. 29, but other than fashion and hairstyle, a visitor traveling one to the other would find them closely akin.

Since Before the Beginning

Hope has changed just a bit since seventh-generation student Andrew Neevel’s family began its long association with the campus.

Van Vleck Hall, today the college’s oldest building, hadn’t even been completed yet when his four-great grandfather, Adrian Zwemer, graduated in 1857 from the Holland Academy that preceded the college. Van Vleck opened the following year.

In fact, even Hope didn’t yet exist. The college, which grew out of the prep school, enrolled its first students in the fall of 1862 and graduated its first class the same year that it received its charter from the State of Michigan, in 1866.

Andrew, who is from Ann Arbor, Mich., arrived on campus in August as the second seventh-generation in the college’s history. The first, nine years earlier, was his cousin Jeff Brown ’07 (Andrew’s father and Jeff’s mother are siblings). In addition to being a seventh-generation student on his father’s side, Andrew is also a fifth-generation student on his mother’s side.

Seventh-generation student Andrew Neevel’s ancestors have been a part of Hope since before the college even began. His four-great grandfather Adrian Zwemer graduated in 1857 from the Holland Academy from which Hope grew a half-decade later.

His extensive Hope ancestry definitely made him aware of Hope (“I knew the school well before I even started to look at colleges because of frequent visits,” he noted), but it didn’t translate into pressure to attend himself. “I looked at a few other schools and weighed my choices like anybody else,” said Andrew, who is interested in pursuing a career in medicine.

What made Hope the right choice for him was the college’s emphasis on the whole person, an approach that he feels will serve him well.

“I liked it because of the liberal arts education,” he said. “I want to be a well-rounded person as well. I liked that Hope offers that.”

Don Van Ark '42

Providing Opportunities for Students with Needs

Don Van Ark '42 has always cared about kids. He and his late wife, Lileeth '42, were teachers, and Don also enjoyed a rewarding 29-year career as principal for Lakeview Elementary School in Holland. With no children of their own, Don and Lileeth made a conscious decision to support organizations that would make a difference in the lives of young people.

By including Hope College in their estate plan, the Van Arks fulfilled a lifelong desire to help provide for students who, without the necessary financial assistance, might not otherwise have the opportunity to enjoy the Hope experience as they did seven decades ago.

Hope is grateful to all of the 700-plus members of the Dimnent Heritage Society for their generosity in supporting the students and faculty of the college. For more than 30 years, planned gifts from donors like Don and Lileeth Van Ark have helped shape the character of Hope College and its community.

The sun smiled on Hope across Orientation Weekend in August, an auspicious beginning for the newly arrived Class of 2016 and to the college's 151st academic year. On campus as his youngest child, John, began his Hope journey, freshman parent Steve Puttrich of Arlington Heights, Ill., enjoyed a quiet moment among Hope landmarks, and an opportunity to record the visit in a unique and personal way. "Both my wife and I are artists. Wherever we go, we bring our painting gear with us," said Steve, whose daughter Emilie graduated from the college in 2009. "I'm always fascinated by the light that is at and surrounding the Hope campus," he said. "What caught my eye was the sunlight coming through those two buildings. It was actually shining on some of the foliage," he noted. "That playing of the light was really intriguing to me."
